17	Any of the above would be fine as long as they are not part of a chain.I absolutely do not want to see chain stores in Altadena. I think it will put the final nail in the coffin. Altadena is a small town, not a big one, and shouldn't waste it's time trying to get stores that will never come. It should pattern itself after small successful communitites like Sierra Madre. I leave my own community all the time to eat and shop there. Chain stores are an outdated trend. Small and local is the trend that is happening all over the country.	Jan 5, 2011 8:55 AM

Coffee Gallery is good but it's hard to work there for any length of time (too many friendly people to distract me). We have the basics, now we need the fun destinations that people will come for. It would be so fantastic if I could go to a nice little place for lunch (like Little Flower Candy Company), in my own community, then stop at the hardware store, Websters and pick a loaf of locally made bred and a gallon of organic milk or some locally made cheese, before heading home.
